Course Overview

The purpose of this course is to explore the interactions between politics and economics in the international system. In the first part of the course, we will explore the theories and approaches in political science that attempt to explain variation in economic exchange in the international system. In the second half, we will address various issues in international political economy, such as international trade, finance, globalization, and regional integration. In these sessions, we will use the theories and analytical tools developed in the first part to critically evaluate the research in these arenas.

In this course, we consider how political institutions and actors deal with the market, and in turn, how the market affects those same institutions and actors. This is not an economics course. However, a certain background knowledge of economic theories, such as the law of comparative advantage, will be helpful. To that end, I listed Krugman and Obstfeld's text in the recommended books section. It is a useful and readable starting point for understanding international economics.

Course Expectations and Requirements

Response Papers

Each student will complete three written critiques of the readings, 2000-2500 words each. Each paper should be distributed to all class members via email by 12pm the Tuesday before class. These response papers will be the starting point for our discussion each week. The authors will also be expected to help lead the discussion during their week. Each student will choose one session from each of the following groups: 2-3, 4-6, and 7-10. To ensure even coverage, we will coordinate response papers during the first session.

I expect the papers to be analytical response papers, not simply restatements of the main arguments for a particular week. Rather than summaries, you should focus on the strengths and weaknesses of the readings, including addressing any debates between the readings as well as discussing any interesting unanswered research questions raised by the authors. Do not feel obliged to address each article from the week. Rather, you may want to focus on one issue or debate and follow it through several pieces. The supplementary readings provide additional resources for this purpose and you are welcome to introduce them to the course. For these readings, though, be aware your classmates will not have read them so a little more summarizing may be in order.
